In most of its uses, under- may be freely employed to form new compounds, the meaning of which is usu. obvious.

I. Denoting local position. 1. With vbs. and parts of vbs. a. Denoting action (or continuance of a state) carried on under or beneath something, as in underbuild, -drain, -gird, -tie, etc. Underhanging, vbl. sb. protrusion (of the lower jaw). Underjawed, ppl. a. underhung. Underla·p, v. trans. to extend some way beneath. Undersi·gn, v. trans. to sign one's name below (a writing). Undertrea·d v. trans. to tread underfoot; to subdue, subjugate. b. Denoting the action of moving so as to be or get or place oneself under something, as undercreep, -fall, -flow, -run. c. Rarely, the sense of 'from below' is found, as in underpeep, -peer. d. A noun of action with under- may have the same form as the verb, as undercut, -hang, -run -thrust.

2. With nouns. a. In names of garments worn under articles of clothing (common after the 16th century), as under-bodice, -PETTICOAT, -robe, -SKIRT, -sleeve, -VEST. b. Denoting that the thing specified is either placed below something else, or is the lower in position of two similar things. When pairs of things are contrasted under- becomes equivalent to lower (as over- to upper), and readily assumes an adjectival function. U·nderboard, the lower of two boards forming an organ bellows or wind-chest. U·nder-bough, one of the lower branches of a tree. U·nderfall, a foot-hill slope. U·nder-frame, the substructure of a railway carriage, forming the frame on which the body rests. U·nderlayer, a lower layer, substratum. U·nder-lid, the lower lid of the eye; a lid placed under another. U·ndersoil, subsoil. U·nder-su·rface, the lower surface of something. c. Denoting position below a surface or covering, or at a depth. U·nder-colour, the colour under the surface-colour (as in fur, feathers, etc.). U·nder-down, the down below the outer feathers of birds. U·nder-drain, an underground drain. U·nder-drift, an undercurrent. U·nderflow sb, an undercurrent. U·nderstra·tum, an underlying layer or stratum. U·nderswell, a swell below the surface, an undercurrent. d. Denoting something which is either covered (completely or partially) by, or is subordinate to, something of the same kind, as UNDERGROWTH, UNDERWOOD. U·nderscrub, undergrowth, brushwood. e. With the sense of 'situated on the underside', as underfeathering, -colouring.

II. Denoting inferiority in rank or importance. 1. a. With designations of persons, esp. of subordinate officers, officials, or servants, as under-actor, -agent, -bailiff, -butler, -captain, -chamberlain, -clerk, -cook, -gaoler, -gardener, -god, -housemaid, -keeper, -labourer, -manager, -officer, -ranger, -servant, -sexton, -shepherd, -sheriff, -steward, -teacher, -tenant, -tutor, -vassal, -warden, -workman. U·nderlooker, -viewer, Mining, a subordinate to the manager, who superintends the miners and workings; a subordinate overseer. b. With other nouns, in the sense of 'subordinate, subsidiary, minor', as under-agency, -cause, -lease, -service. U·nder-school, a (or the) lower or junior school.

2. With vbs., denoting reduction to (or acceptance of) an inferior or subordinate standing, as UNDERSTUDY v.

III. fig. 1. With vbs. a. In OE., various secondary meanings of under- are represented by such verbs as underfôn to receive, understandan to UNDERSTAND; several of these survive in ME., and a few more are added, as undertake. In later examples, the sense is usu. that of (secret) investigation, as undersearch, -watch, or of unobserved action, as †underhear. b. From the end of the 16th c. under- is used with vbs. in the sense of 'at a lower rate than another person', as underbid, -buy, -quote, -sell. c. occas., = 'to a point or degree below what is normal or customary', as in undercooled. d. Very rarely, subordinate action is implied, as in Underlea·se v. trans. to sublet.

2. With nouns, denoting actions, etc., which lie or are kept beneath the surface or in the background. U·nderlook sb. a covert look or glance. U·nderplay sb. an underlying or hidden motion or action. U·ndersense, an underlying sense (of something). U·nderthought, a hidden thought, reservation, arrière-pensée. b. With words denoting sound of a subdued or subordinate character, esp. when produced or perceived at the same time as a louder or more distinct sound, as UNDERTONE. U·ndernote, a subdued note; an undertone or suggestion.

IV. Denoting insufficiency or defect. a. With verbal forms. Denoting, freq. by contrast with OVER- II. 6, that the action falls below the usual or proper standard, and thus = 'at too low a rate', 'too low', 'too little', 'insufficiently': as in underburn, -coloured, -dose v., -horsed, -masted, †-matched, -measure, -officered, -paid, -pay, -peopled, -play, -praise, -prize, -reckon, -roast, -staff, -staffed, -stock, -stocked, -witted, etc. Underbi·ll v. trans. (U.S.), to enter (goods) at less than the actual amount or value. Under-expo·se v. intr. and trans., Photogr to give too little exposure to; so Under-exposed ppl. a. Underhi·ve v. trans. to place (bees) in too small a hive. Underli·mbed ppl. a. having legs too slender in proportion to the body. Underma·tch v. trans. to unite or bestow in marriage below the proper rank or condition. Underpri·nt v. trans. to print (an engraving or photograph) with insufficient depth or distinctness. Undershoo·t v. trans. and intr. to shoot short (of) or too low (for). Undertru·mp v. trans. and intr. to follow (one's partner) in trumping, but with a lower card. b. With nouns, in the sense of 'insufficient, deficient, defective', contrasted with OVER- II. 8; as in underbidder, -ESTIMATE, -exposure, -match sb., -price sb., -production, -wit. c. With adjs., as opp. to OVER- II. 7, rare except when directly suggested by the latter, as in underhonest (SHAKS.; in contrast to overproud), under-ripe, -scrupulous.

Under- prefix 2, originating in the coalescence of UNDER prep. with a following noun, the compound being then usu. employed as an adj. or adv., as UNDERFOOT, -GROUND, -HAND. In attrib. use these compounds have the stress on the prefix. U·nder-sea, a. situated or lying below the sea or the surface of the sea; intended for use below the surface of the sea. Undersea·, adv. below the sea or its surface. U·nder-size, a. below the proper or ordinary size. U·nderturf, a. of earth or soil, situated or found below the turf.

Uni- (yū·ni), repr. L. uni-, comb. form of unus one, forming the first element in many words with the sense 'having, composed or consisting of, or characterized by one (thing specified by the second element)'. The older examples are directly adopted from French or Latin, as UNANIMOUS, UNIVERSAL. In the 15th and 16th centuries additional words were formed of L. elements and on L. analogy; in the 17th and 18th the prefix gained currency and appeared in some abnormal functions, as unifold, unisoul; and in the 19th it came into frequent use in forming scientific and technical terms, esp. in Bot. and Zool. The second element of these compounds is usually of L. origin, but the prefix has been combined with English forms or words, and has been used occas. in place of the Gr. equivalent MONO-. (In scientific works the figure 1 is often substituted for uni-, as in 1-bracteate.)

Up-, prefix, repr. OE. up-, upp-, identical with Up adv.[1]

I. In comb. with sbs. 1. In OE. up- occurs freely with sbs., in the sense of 'occupying a higher position', 'upper', as in upflōr. In ME. this type practically disappears, and in later use is represented chiefly by UPLAND sb. and UPSIDE. b. In the sense of 'in a supported state', in OE. upheald, etc., ME. uptis (naut.), and the modern upkeep.

2. In the sense of 'upwards' OE. had compound with nouns, mainly derived from intr. vbs., as upcyme, -spring, etc. Many of these disappeared in ME., but new formations were added, and since 1800 the type has become common. Examples are upbreak, -burst, -curve, -glance, -growth, -leap, -look, -shoot, -sweep, turn. b. More rarely up- is employed in the sense of 'upwards' with other nouns than those of action, as OE. upweg, and the recent up-grade, -road, etc.

II. Up- is rarely employed in comb. with adjs.: U·phand a. operated, or performed by raising the hand or hands. †U·pspring a. upstart, newly arisen or come in.

III. 1. With vbs., participles, agent-nouns, etc. In OE., up was placed immediately before a vbl. form only in a limited number of instances, as upgán, -hebban, etc.; it is difficult to determine in how many of these the adv. had become a real prefix. In ME. the use of the prefix is thoroughly established and new formations have been constantly added during the following centuries. A considerable proportion, however, occur only in poetry, and are simple substitutions for the vb. followed by the adv., although they are regarded as real compounds and written as one word. Examples are: uparise, -bear, -blaze, -blow, -boil, -break, -buoy, -call, -drag, -draw, -fill, -grow, -jet, -keep, -look, -move, -roll, -rouse, -shoot, -snatch, -stir, -tear, -thrust, -wind, -wrap.

2. The use of up with pa. pples. gave rise to compounds of which several had already so far established themselves in OE. that derivatives in -nes and -lice were formed from them. The type is still usual, but at all periods these forms have been mainly employed in verse. When they are used attrib., the stress is normally on the prefix. Examples are: up-blown, -choked, -flung, -looped, -ploughed, -poised, -propped, -ripped, -rolled, -swept, -wrapped.

3. The use of up before pres. pples. is somewhat rare in OE.; ME. furnishes a few instances, but this type of formation becomes common only after 1500. Examples are: uparising, -blazing, -brimming, -gliding, -keeping, -rousing, -staring, -steaming, -swarming, -wreathing. b. In the earlier periods these forms in -ing were not used attrib.; examples of this use begin to appear in the 16th c., but are not common before the 19th. As adjs., such compounds normally have the main stress on the prefix, but in verse the stress is freq. on the stem. Examples are: upbearing, -creeping, -cropping, -flashing, -gushing, -lying, -pouring, -sticking, -stretching, -striving, -struggling.

4. In OE. the comb. of up- with a vbl. sb. is limited to one instance, uphebbing; in ME. the type is also rare, but it becomes common in the 16th c. and again in the 19th. Examples are: †uparising, -bubbling, †-crying, -gushing, -piling, -putting, -sealing, -surging, -swelling, -working.

5. The use of up- with agent-nouns first appears in the 14th c., in upstyer, uptaker, etc. Similar forms appear in the 16th c. (but chiefly Sc.), as up-creeper, -lifter, -looker, and a few in the 17th as upbringer, riser. Later formations are mainly from the 19th c., as upbuilder, -climber, -stander.

V

V (vī), the 22nd letter of the modern English and the 20th of the ancient Roman alphabet, was in the latter an adoption of the early Greek vowel-symbol V, now also represented by U and Y, but in Latin was employed also with the value of the Greek digamma, viz. (w), to which it corresponds phonologically. Under the Empire, the semi-vocalic sound gradually changed to a bilabial consonant, and finally became the labio-dental voiced open consonant (spirant) now denoted by this letter in English and various other languages.

The use of v in English first became established with the influx of French words into literature, and it is subsequently used freely in native words as well as in those of Latin or other origin. It had a double function, like U (q.v.), until in the 17th century u and v were finally distinguished as vowel and consonant symbols; even in the 19th century words beginning with either letter continued to form one series in some dictionaries, and this arrangement survives still in some catalogues.

Elision of v when not initial has taken place extensively in dialects. In standard English this is represented by such words as hawk, head, lark, lord, and is specially indicated in a few archaic or poetic forms, as e'en even, e'er ever, ne'er never, o'er over.

I. 1. The letter or its name. 2. Used with ref. to the shape of the letter; an object having this shape; a V-shaped, acute-angled formation; also attrib., freq. in the sense 'shaped like the letter V'; v.-neck, a neck (as of a dress) cut in front in the shape of a letter V. 3. Used to denote serial order, as V Battery, MS. V, or as a symbol of some thing or person.

II. The Roman numeral symbol for: Five (or fifth). b. V, V-spot, V-note, a five-dollar note. U.S.

III. Abbreviations. a. Of various Latin words or phrases: v. = verso the back of the leaf, versus against, vide see; v.g. = verbi gratia. b. Of English words and phrases: V = various proper names, as Victoria, Vincent, etc; the chemical symbol of Vanadium; v. = verb, verse, vision (in Med.), volt, etc.; very (as v.g. very good, v.h.c. very highly commended, etc.); V.A. = Vicar-Apostolic; V.C. = Victoria Cross; v.d. – various dates; V.M. = Virgin Mary; V.P. – Vice-President; v.r. = variant or various reading; V.S. = veterinary surgeon. c. THE GLORY OF STAINED GLASS

Staining of glass by fusion of metallic oxides into the glass, burning of pigment into its surface, or by putting together glass of different colours, probably arose in the Near East at about the 9th century. The earliest known Western examples are perhaps those in Augsburg Cathedral, dating from the middle of the 11th century. Among the best examples of early 14th-century work is the window seen above (top right) from the Abbey of St. Pierre at Chartres. Stained glass has always been a vehicle for symbolism and this can be seen in a current form in the windows for the new Coventry Cathedral. Three artists, under the leadership of Lawrence Lee, Head of the Stained Glass Department at the Royal College of Art, produced the designs. His colleagues were Geoffrey Clarke and Keith New. The windows are arranged in five pairs, facing each other across the nave, symbolising progressively the life of man. On one side the natural order is represented and, on the other, the Divine, and each pair of windows has its theme and appropriate colour. The upper part of the Red Window (top left), by Lawrence Lee, shows angels standing on buildings representing the church all over the earth while above them is the Final Revelation, the eyes of God open to all Truth. The striking window (right) is in the Royal Air Force Chapel which forms part of Henry VII's Chapel in Westminster Abbey. It was designed by Hugh Easton. The greater portion of the third and the whole of the fourth tier (only the lower three are seen here) contain the badges of the sixty-three Fighter Squadrons of the Royal Air Force who took part in the Battle of Britain.

W

W (dʊ·b'l,yū), the 23rd letter of the modern English alphabet, is an addition to the ancient Roman alphabet, having originated from a ligatured doubling of the Roman letter represented by the U and V of modern alphabets. The English sound represented by w, a gutturally-modified bilabial voiced spirant, acoustically almost identical with the devocalised (u) or (u) which was the sound orig. expressed by the Roman U or V as a consonant-symbol, was at first usu. written uu; but in the 8th c. this sign began to be superseded by the Runic character ƿ (wyn, Kentish wen). In the 11th c. the ligatured form was introduced into England by Norman scribes, and ƿ finally went out of use about A.D. 1300.

In OE. the sound (w) occurred initially not only before vowels but also before (l) and (r); the combination wl became obs. in the 15th c., and wr, though still written, is now pronounced (r) in standard English. OE. had also the initial combination (hw): see WH.

The chief etymological sources of Eng. (w) are (1) OE. (w), repr. Indo-Eur. w, *gh*ʷ, kw, *k*ʷ; (2) ON. (w) of the same origin; (3) OF. (w), later becoming (gw) and finally (g), except in north-eastern F. dialects. The sound also occurs in words of L. origin containing the combinations qu (kw) and su (sw), as question, persuade, and in a few F. words, as reservoir (-vwāɹ).

As a consonant symbol, the letter always denotes (w), but in a few words it has ceased to be pronounced (as in answer, sword, two, and in the combination wr). In the unstressed second element of a compound, (w) tends to be elided in colloquial speech; this pronunciation is in some words a mere vulgarism (marked by spellings like allus for always) but in Norwich and some other place-names in -wich and in the nautical terms forward (forrard), gunwale it is the only one regarded as correct.

In ME. a new (w) arose from the development of intervocalic or final (γ), as in bowe:—boȝe:—OE. boga BOW *sb.*¹; but this sound has not survived as a consonant, since every (w) after a stressed vowel became a u-glide, the terminal element of a diphthong. In modern spelling aw, ew, ow are phonetically equivalent to au, eu, ou, though ow now never stands for (ū) except in the surname Cowper; the choice between u and w is mainly arbitrary, but at the end of a word w, not u, is used almost invariably.

In south-eastern dialects (w) is regularly substituted for (v), and many writers of the first half of the 19th c. attribute to the Cockney dialect the habit of misusing (w) for (v), and also the (probably merely occasional) reverse substitution of (v) for (w) on all occasions.

A mispronunciation of (w) for (v), in some persons due to a physical defect, has sometimes been a fashionable affectation.

-ward suffix, OE. -weard, primarily forming adjs. with the sense 'having a specified direction':—OTeut. -wardo-, f. ward-, var. of werþ-:—pre-Teut. wert- (L. vertere) to turn.

1. The suffix, usu. denoting direction of movement, was orig. appended only to local advs., and in OE. was still confined to this use. 2. The adjs. in -weard, like the corresponding words in other Teut. langs., admitted of being used advb. in the accus. (OE. -weard) or in the gen. (OE. -weardes -WARDS) of the neut. sing. On the analogy of the older advs. with this suffix, there were formed in ME. several compounds in which -weard was added to advs., esp. to compound advs. of phrasal origin, as in abackward, adownward, awayward (which were soon displaced by the aphetic forms backward, downward, wayward. 3. In OE. the adv. tóweard was also used as a prep., with the sense 'in the direction leading to', and in early ME. †fromward acquired a similar use. Later there are isolated examples of this development of function in some other advs. in -ward (e.g. inward, onward). 4. In OE. the suffix was sometimes attached to a phrase consisting of a sb. or pronoun governed by a prep. The description of this type of expression (represented by the obs. or arch. forms 'to heavenward(s', 'to the city ward(s', 'to us-ward'), as a 'tmesis' of the preps. toward(s, †fromward(s, is not historically correct. 5. On the analogy of the advb. compounds originating from the omission of to (e.g. heavenward adv. from to heavenward), the suffix has in the mod. Eng. period been added freely to sbs. to form advs. expressing direction, aspect, or tendency. From the 16th c. onwards there has been a growing disposition to use the advs. in -ward as adjs.; in the 19th c. or the last years of the 18th c. several new adjs. of this formation appear for the first time: e.g. earthward, Godward, skyward; these, however, have been confined to literary use.

-wards, suffix, OE. -weardes, corresp. to OS., MLG. -wardes, OHG., MHG. -wartes, the ending of the neut. genit. sing. (used advb.) of adjs. in OTeut. *-wardo-; see -WARD.

1. The history of -wards as an advb. suffix is identical with that of -ward; beside every adv. in -ward there has existed (at least potentially) a parallel formation in -wards, and vice versa. The two forms are so nearly synonymous that the choice between them is mostly determined by some notion of euphony in the particular context. Where, however, the meaning to be expressed includes the notion of manner as well as direction of movement, -wards is required, as in 'to walk backwards'. In other instances the distinction seems to be that -wards is used when the adv. is meant to express a definite direction in contrast with other directions: thus we say 'it is moving forwards' if it is moving at all', but 'to come forward', not 'forwards'. 2. In OE. the suffix weardes, like -weard, was added to phrases containing the preps. tō and wið (see -WARD 4). In to..ward(s, from wards, the two forms of the suffix were formerly equally common, but -wards now survives only in dialects.

Wh, a consonantal digraph, normally represents initial hw in words of OE. origin; in words of other origin its occurrence may be due to analogy; it sometimes varies with h or simple w; e.g. whoop and hoop, whelked and welked. Historically OE. initial hw represents OTeut. hw, under which Indo-European qʷ and kw were levelled. The normal OE. spelling hw was generally preserved in ME. till late in the 13th c.; the modern spelling wh is first found in regular use in the Ormulum.

In OE. the pronunciation symbolized by hw was probably in the earliest periods a voiced bilabial consonant preceded by a breath. This was developed in two different directions: (1) it was reduced to a simple voiced consonant (w); (2) by the influence of the accompanying breath, the voiced (w) became unvoiced. The first of these pronunciations (w) is now universal in English dialect speech except in the four northernmost counties and north Yorkshire, and is that prevailing among educated speakers. The second pronunciation, denoted in this dictionary by the conventional symbol (hw), is general in Scotland, Ireland, and America, and is used by a large proportion of educated speakers in England, either from social or educational tradition, or from a preference for what is considered a careful or correct pronunciation.

The symbol (hw) is used systematically in this Dictionary in the pronunc. of words beginning with wh.

ME. b. In 1st pers. pl., expressing a proposal = 'let us' ME. 13. In 2nd and 3rd pers., as auxiliary expressing mere futurity, forming (with pres. inf.) the future, and (with pf. inf.) the future pf. tense OE. b. As auxiliary of future substituted for the imper. in mild injunctions or requests 1824. 14. As auxiliary of future expressing a contingent event, or a result to be expected, in a supposed case or under particular conditions OE. b. Expressing a voluntary act or choice in a supposed case, or a conditional promise or undertaking: esp. in asseverations (e.g. I w. die sooner than..., I'll be hanged if...). late ME. c. Expressing a determinate or necessary consequence (without the notion of futurity). late ME. d. With the notion of futurity obscured or lost: = w. prove or turn out to; may be supposed to, presumably does. Hence (chiefly Sc. and n. dial.) in estimates of amount, etc., the future becoming equivalent to a present with qualification: e.g. it w. be.. = I think it is..., it is about... 1450. 15. Used where shall is now the normal auxiliary; since 17th c. chiefly in Scottish, Irish, provincial, or extra-British use OE. 16. absol. or with ellipsis of obj. clause as in 2: = sense I. 4–6. OE. 17. With ellipsis of a verb of motion. arch. OE. 18. With ellipsis of active inf. to be supplied from the context; also with generalized ellipsis, and with so or that (now usu. at the beginning of the sentence) substituted for the omitted inf. phr. OE. b. In a qualifying phr. with relative, equivalent to a phr. with indef. relative in -ever: e.g. shout as loud as you w. = 'however loud you (choose to) shout'. late ME. 19. In a disjunctive qualifying clause or phr. (usu. parenthetical), as whether he w. or no, w. he nill he, etc. late ME.
